

Tier 1 Social

A bustling inn along a busy street.

Impulses: entertain guests, offer a good night's rest.

Difficulty: 11

Potential Adversaries: Merchant, Guard (Bladed, Archer, Captain)

FEATURES

Place of Personality - Passive: While here, PCs gain Advantage on Presence Rolls—they more easily project and share themselves here.

Is this a result of the social environment, or is magic at play?

Play For Your Stay - Passive: The inn's stage is welcoming: the PCs may present their musical or otherwise entertaining talents, making a Group Presence Roll with the following result:

- Critical Success: they all get a bag full of gold and a free week's stay.
- Success with Hope: they all get a handful of gold and a free night's stay.
- Success with Fear. they get heckled, but a free night's stay.
- Any Failure: free night's stay if they mark a Stress.

How common are musical acts here? Do the people of the Resting Dagger Inn have a taste for stand-up routines? Who performed before the party, and who went after?

Wait, I Know You - Reaction: Spend a Fear to have a rival adventuring party recognize the PCs—they hold a grievance related to a past quest the PCs may not even realize, but they demand satisfaction. If it turns to violence, they act as 1 Guard Captain, 3 Bladed Guards, and 1 Guard Archer.

Is the grievance legitimate or concocted? Did the PCs' success ensure their rivals' quest's failure, or were they beaten to the punch on the same job?

STORY SEEDS

Highly Recommended

On their last romp through dangerous dungeons and rugged wilderness, the party met a fellow traveler—who sang the praises of the Resting Dagger Inn. They say it's a wonderful place to relax and enjoy a bit of entertainment between adventures. What's more, they're certain someone there mentioned your names, but they're not sure who...

Is this a connection looking for the PCs, or are there rivals already there looking for them?

Dance by the Fire in the Sky

A performer here perfectly matches a character from a PC's dreams.

What magic is afoot here?
