ABOUT FITZGIBBON'S ANTIQUES & ODDITIES

Two years after inheriting her Uncle Langley's vast collection of antiques and oddities, Beale Greyslie has finally cleared out the items packed tightly in the manor's attic. While cleaning and reorganizing the mess, she told herself she would celebrate by closing the shop and taking a few days off to relax on the beaches of Aledocina Bay.

To her dismay, she discovered an oddly shaped door at the back of the attic. When she tried to open it, she found it locked. She rushed downstairs to the kitchen, where she kept a ring of keys in a messy drawer. She tried each one, and after 10 minutes she found the correct one among the more than thirty keys on the ring.

When she opened the door, she was greeted by a musky odor and darkness. She cast a spell, and the sconces in the door flicked to life, revealing a massive room filled with more items. She gasped and stepped further in. "This must be an extra-dimensional space!" S he exclaimed. She walked to the end of the room, which led to a hallway lined with several other doors on both sides.

"No, this can't be possible," she murmured, opening the door closest to her. As it creaked open, the magical light from the sconces revealed another large room filled with more items. "Langley Edward Fitzgibbon!" She exclaimed, half in disgust, half in bewilderment. She raised her hand, conjured her broom with a magical gesture, and commanded it to begin sweeping. With a sigh, she accepted that she wouldn't be taking a vacation anytime soon.
